Empowering UN System Gender Focal Points, Blended Training

Online: 24 April – 12 May 2017

Face to face: 15 – 19 May 2017

Empowering UN System Gender Focal Points, Blended Training

Background

Most UN agencies have developed internal networks of gender focal points (GFPs) and gender facilitators, in HQ and in the field. Some agencies have had GFP networks for over 10 years while others have implemented them more recently. All are guided by the 1997 UN ECOSOC gender mainstreaming policy, which was and still is a gender equality land mark.

Though gender equality has improved in many regards, there remain challenges and GFPs are at the forefront of the action: they are part of their own agency structure and often sit on interagency networks and gender thematic groups within the UN Country Team. So how are they coping? How do they view their own experience? And how can the UN structure provide greater support? The UN Women Training Centre and the International Training Centre of the ILO have joined forces to develop this unique training package addressing the challenges GFPs face in their work.

Content

This course is an introduction to gender mainstreaming and gender tools in the UN system. It is meant to support Gender Focal Points in getting started on gender mainstreaming.

This online and residential training in Turin will provide GFPs with an introduction to the UN Gender architecture and explore strategies and tools for identifying and addressing gender equality obstacles within the UN. It will examine gender mainstreaming tools, such as the gender markers, and frameworks such as and the UN System Wide Approach on Gender Equality and the Sustainable Development Goals. The workshop contributes to the development of a community of practice within the UN to foster discussion and sharing of good practices.

Objectives

At the end of this blended training, GFPs will:

- Deepen basic gender concepts;
- Explore thematic areas dealing with key gender and women's issues;
- Understand gender architecture in the UN System;
- Be able to apply gender mainstreaming tools;
- Have developed their skills in advocacy and communication.

The training will also promote the building of a community to encourage discussion and sharing of good practices. This community will also support access to resources and tools.

Methodology

The course will use a combination of interactive online and face to face knowledge sharing methodologies to build GFPs capacities starting from their existing experience and serve as a refresher on gender mainstreaming. The ITCILO and the UN Women Training Centre will collaborate to deliver the course jointly, using a combination of online and face to face knowledge sharing methodologies to build GFPs capacities starting from their existing experience and serve as a refresher on gender mainstreaming. The face to face portion will be held at the ITCILO Campus in Turin.

Participants' Profile

This training is addressed to UN system GFPs and gender facilitators tasked with supporting and promoting gender integration in their work unit and agencies (not suited for gender specialists). GFPs usually work in their own technical area of expertise and have the added responsibility of "facilitating" gender mainstreaming internally and often with external partners. They are not usually gender expert though they may (or may not) have a good knowledge on gender issues out of their own interest or other previous work experience.
