International Labour Standards for Judges, Lawyers and Legal Educators

This course is part of the International Labour Standards Academy, designed to provide knowledge to a varied audience, building bridges and understanding between groups of participants from different professions and regions.

To this purpose, the training programme is enriched with a daily plenary session focused on relevant subjects that are collectively shaping the world of work, exploring how they all connect and relate to International Labour Standards.

Background and rationale

International labour standards (ILS) adopted by the International Labour Organization (ILO) are important tools for the development of national legislation. However, the contribution of international labour law is not limited to its impact on labour legislation. ILS can also contribute to strengthening domestic case law on labour matters.

International labour law is a highly valuable resource for domestic judges and lawyers seeking to settle labour disputes. Together with the comments and analysis of the relevant supervisory bodies, ILS offer a matchless source of interpretation and inspiration for judges and lawyers in ILO member States. Several examples show that domestic courts are hesitating less and less to draw not only on international labour Conventions and Recommendations but also on the work of the ILO's supervisory bodies to interpret and complement their domestic law.

The International Training Centre of the ILO in Turin, Italy, accordingly intends to encourage the advanced training of judges, lawyers (including legal experts representing employers' organizations and workers' organizations) and university law teachers to enable them to make full use of the sources of international labour law in their daily practice.

Objectives

General objective

The main objective of the course is to equip law professionals with the knowledge that will enable them to use international labour law sources at national level.

Specific objectives

At the end of this training, participants will:

- have an in-depth knowledge of the instruments and supervisory machinery of the ILS system;
- be able to use the analysis and pronouncements of the ILO's supervisory bodies;
- be able to determine when and how domestic judges and lawyers can use international labour law to solve labour disputes;
- be able to identify and make use of ILS in key areas such as freedom of association, the right to collective

- bargaining, non-discrimination in employment and occupation, forced labour, child labour, occupational safety and health, termination of employment;
- be able to use ILO and ITC-ILO databases on ILS and case-law relying on ILS.

Participants' profile

The course is intended for law professionals who are in a position to apply ILS or to teach them. They include judges from courts and tribunals that deal with labour litigation, university law teachers, labour lawyers and legal experts who represent the interests of employers' or workers' organizations.

Structure and content

The course structure is based on the premise that participants are already versed in legal concepts and thinking. To enable participants to use the sources of international labour law at national level, the course will cover the following:

- general presentation of the ILS system: main characteristics of ILO standards; the ILS procedures from international drafting to national application;
- when and how domestic judges and lawyers can use international labour law;
- the work of the ILO's supervisory bodies and its relevance to domestic judges and lawyers;
- the content of ILS on freedom of association and the right to collective bargaining;
- the content of ILS on equality in employment and occupation;
- the content of ILS on forced labour;
- the content of ILS on child labour;
- the content of ILS on occupational safety and health;
- the content of ILS on termination of employment;
- ILO and ITC-ILO databases on ILS and on case-law relying on ILS.

Language

Both English and French will be used during the course, with simultaneous interpretation. Proficiency in one of the two languages is thus required.

Methodology and materials

Both the timing of the course and its duration are intended to make it easier for law professionals to participate. Its limited duration (2 weeks) should enable law professionals to participate without renouncing their other commitments. These conditions mean that the time available will be used intensively in both morning and afternoon sessions.

The training methods used in the course aim to take advantage of the participants' high-level of competencies and experience. Considerable time will therefore be devoted to case studies, role-plays and group discussions. The materials used during the course include a training manual and a compendium of court decisions from numerous jurisdictions around the world, which have relied on ILS.

Moreover, participants will have access to an online course platform including all course materials.

To facilitate the sharing of information and experience, each participant will be asked to deliver a report before the course on the use of international law in the case law of his/her home country, with a special focus on international labour law.

Resource persons

The course will be taught by experts from the ITC-ILO and the ILO. The lecturers will include two members of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, one of the main ILO bodies supervising the application of ILS by member States.
