Extension of Social Protection: towards a universal social floor

Context

The present global economic crisis has shown that the households accessing social protection are less affected by the crisis and, that redistribution of wealth through social protection allows vulnerable households to continue being part of and contributing to the economy. As the global crisis has now reached every country of the world, the importance and necessity of adequate social protection systems in bringing meaningful support to the people has never been as clear. However, globally, only one person out of five has adequate social protection coverage and the large part of the excluded are found in the informal economy and amongst the poor and vulnerable populations of society.

In light of this and recognizing the power of social protection as a poverty alleviation instrument, a contribution to sustainable development and an automatic economy stabilizer, the United Nations System Chief Executives Board (CEB) recently adopted (April 2009), "the social protection floor initiative" as one of its nine key priorities to cope with the global crisis. In the context of the "One UN", when all United Nations' agencies join forces and adopt common priorities and recognized solutions for a larger impact, the social protection floor has been identified as an efficient immediate response to the global crisis, as well as a sound and sustainable instrument for diminishing socio-economic inequities and contributing to economic growth in the long term.

This year, the extension of social protection course will look at the horizontal and vertical dimensions from which a country can tackle the extension of protection coverage to its population. The horizontal dimension is the adoption of a social protection floor aiming at providing a universal minimum set of social protection benefits at country level. It aims at providing social protection coverage to the poor and the most vulnerable populations of a country. The vertical dimension addresses the improvement/safeguarding of minimum benefit entitlements in the formal and formalizing sectors, i.e. within the frame of reference of Convention 102.

In this context, the International Training Centre of the ILO in Turin, in close collaboration with the Social Security Department of the ILO and other agencies of the UN System involved in the social protection floor initiative, is organizing a training activity on "Extension of social protection - towards a universal social protection floor".

Objectives

The main objective of this interregional training course is to strengthen the capacity of key actors and stakeholders to design and implement strategies to extend social protection, in the framework of the social protection floor initiative and other extension channels, as a response to the crisis but also as a sustainable strategy for growth and development.
