BEST PRACTICES IN ILS REPORTING

22 MARCH – 14 MAY 2021
⏰ 8 WEEKS, 6 HRS/WEEK

Information Note
BACKGROUND AND RATIONALE

One of the oldest and most important functions of the International Labour Organization (ILO) is the setting of International Labour Standards (ILS). These standards cover a wide range of subjects in the world of work. They are adopted by the tripartite International Labour Conference and take the form of Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols. Conventions are international treaties that are open to ratification by member States. By ratifying them, member States formally undertake to make their provisions effective, both in law and in practice, and to periodically report on steps being taken in this regard. Recommendations are non-binding instruments which provide guidance for national policy, legislation and practice. Protocols are partial and optional revisions or amendments of earlier Conventions. Since the foundation of the ILO in 1919, 190 Conventions, 206 Recommendations and 6 Protocols have been adopted.

Since its creation, the ILO has developed mechanisms for monitoring the application of ILS in law and practice which are unique at the international level. The regular system for supervising the application of ILS is based primarily on information provided by governments in their reports on the application of ratified Conventions due in accordance with article 22 of the ILO Constitution and on observations in this regard made by employers’ and workers’ organizations. Two bodies examine this information: the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations (CEACR) and the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (CAS). Both Committees have recalled on numerous occasions that failures to fulfil reporting obligations hinder the functioning of the supervisory system as a whole.

The International Training Centre of the ILO (ITCILO), in collaboration with the International Labour Standards Department (NORMES), seeks to assist countries in complying with reporting obligations on the application of ratified Conventions.

WHO IS THE TARGET AUDIENCE?
